

1. Institution Overview

Lusíada University

Founded in 1986, Lusíada University is one of the most recognized private universities in Portugal, recognized for its history and the quality of education it offers. The University has three campi in the cities of Lisbon, Porto, and Vila Nova de Famalicão, and currently welcomes approximately 6,000 students in undergraduate, master's, and doctoral programs, taught in Portuguese, with the possibility, in some cases, of developing training programs also in English. Lusíada University also offers postgraduate training, intensive and specialization courses, developing its content, including the pedagogical aspects, for online teaching.

All programs are accredited by the Agency for Assessment and Accreditation of Higher Education (A3ES), guaranteeing the highest quality standards recognized throughout Europe.

Scientific research has been increasingly valued at Lusíada University, which has research units accredited by the Foundation for Science and Technology (FCT) in various fields of knowledge, reinforcing the institution's commitment to innovation and academic development.

International students can apply under the general international student regime and, Brazilian students can also apply for undergraduate courses through the ENEM (National High School Exam). To ensure academic integration, the University applies the same tuition fees as Portuguese students.

Lusíada University also offers mobility and study or internship exchange programs, both in European countries (through the Erasmus+ program) and outside Europe (extra-community mobility), providing an enriching international experience.

With a welcoming environment, Lusíada provides support for academic and social integration, ensuring that each student feels at home from day one.

Come live in Portugal and build your future at Lusíada University — a university with history, quality and an international vocation.
